POPEYE
SAYS
NOT COOL!

Humpback Whale
(Megaptera novaeangliae)

Singing stars of the sea

Among these giants of the ocean, the female is actually larger than the male and only the male sings. They learn different dialects of the whale song from their own local population, just like humans!

- They eat about 1.5 tons of krill per day
- Can measure up to 50 feet long and have tails 18 feet wide!

Kihansi Spray Toad
(Nectophrynoides asperginis)

Small sizes small numbers

The Kihansi Spray Toad is endemic to a small area at the base of a waterfall near the Kihansi River in Tanzania. A captive breeding program has greatly increased their numbers and they are now being reintroduced into the wild.

- Their bellies are transparent, making it possible to see their food and baby larvae
- Known to play dead or eject water from their bladder if disturbed

Tasmanian Devil
(Ambystoma calliforniense)

Not just a cartoon

This marsupial may not look like the famous cartoon, but can fly into a screaming, teeth-baring rage when threatened.

- Native to forests on the Australian island state of Tasmania.
- Nocturnal – scavenges at night for birds, snakes, fish and insects.
- Endangered and rapidly disappearing from deadly disease affecting only Tasmanian devils.

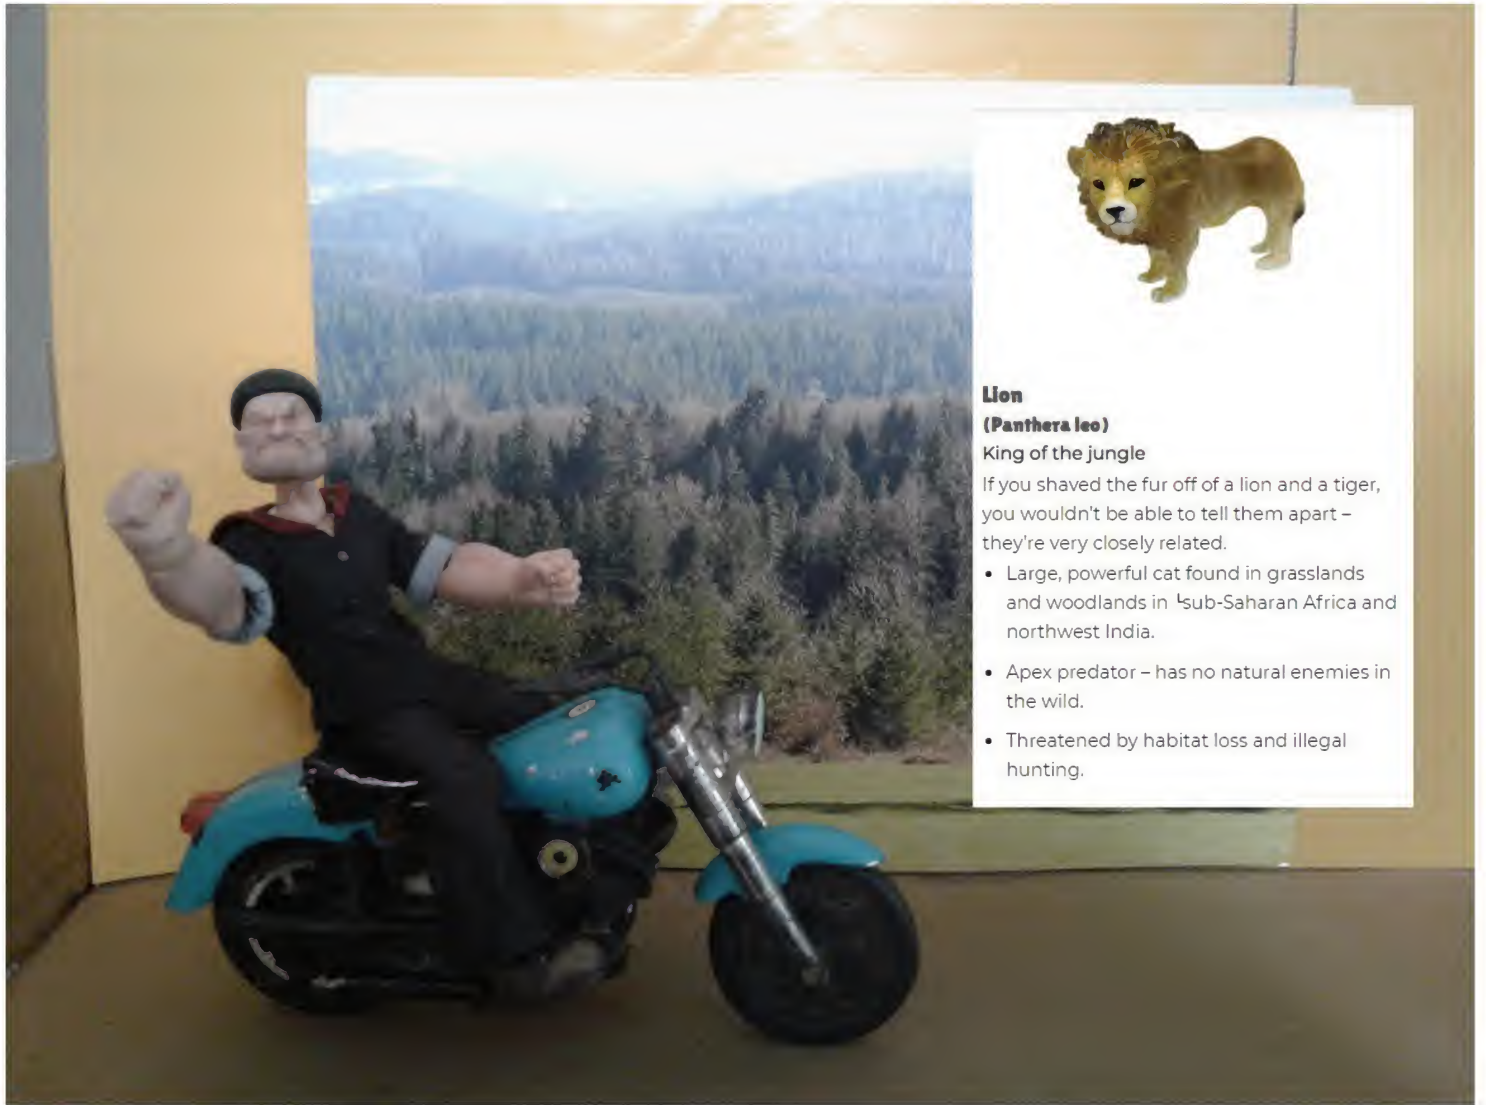

Chimpanzee
(Pan troglodytes)

Smart, social & strong

Highly intelligent, the chimpanzee is one of the only animals that makes tools for finding food or using as weapons.

- Found throughout the forests of Africa.
- Lives in large community groups with complicated social systems.
- Endangered due to habitat loss and poaching for meat.
- Up to four times stronger than the average human.

Lion

(Panthera leo)

King of the jungle

If you shaved the fur off of a lion and a tiger, you wouldn't be able to tell them apart – they're very closely related.

- Large, powerful cat found in grasslands and woodlands in sub-Saharan Africa and northwest India.
- Apex predator – has no natural enemies in the wild.
- Threatened by habitat loss and illegal hunting.

Lar Gibbon
(Hylobates lar)

Loud strong swinger

Also known as the white-handed gibbon, this primate swings between branches using its powerful arms and hooked hands.

- Found in the rainforests of southeast Asia.
- Eats mainly fruit, but is very selective – will taste fruit for ripeness before eating.
- Endangered from deforestation and the pet trade.
- Every morning they send loud calls through the forest marking their territories.

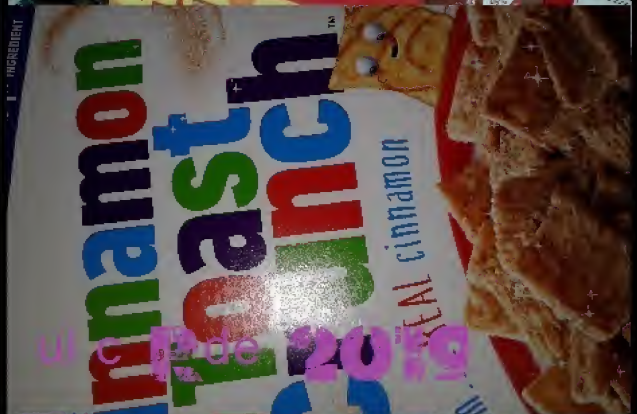

SPARK

The fiery flame-fanning Grumkin

Spark are very silly Grumkin. They don't care at all about the terrible wood and tree fires they cause in the forests and they don't stop to think about the wonderful things that grow there and the wild folk who live among the trees.

i used old xmas paper
clear package tape
and these two boxes so what do you think folks for a craft idea around xmas time.

ulcrde 2019 my tug boat for popeye my child hood hero.
